Horatio Nelson, I've heard them say, might have lived to another day, had he covered his medals and bowed his head, a sniper would not have shot him dead.

But I say ye this, who care to read, in each man's life there stands a need to wave a flag, albeit his own; and if in consequence he bleed and groan, then Honor reaps what Pride has sown.